United Nations Day Message from the Secretary-General

On this day, 24 October 1964, the nineteenth anniversary of the United Nations, I once again appeal for renewed efforts to support and strengthen our Organization.

Over the years, we have built up a tradition of observing United Nations Day, not just as a day of rejoicing and receptions, but also as an occasion for rededicating ourselves to all that the United Nations stands for. It is a time to look back with quiet pride on what has been achieved, and forward with hope and determination to the great tasks that lie ahead.

In the short span of nineteen years the United Nations has proved beyond a doubt that it has an essential role in our contemporary society. Views may differ on the faults and virtues of our Organization. Some may single out its weaknesses and others extol its virtues. But no one denies the need for its existence, since it is no longer possible to think of a world without the United Nations.

The record speaks for itself. In the political field, the United Nations has taken swift and constructive action whenever it was faced with an international crisis. At this very moment, United Nations peace-keeping forces and observer groups are on duty in several troubled areas of the world.

The maintenance of peace is, of course, our most important task, for a nuclear war could wipe out the world. But there are other grave problems — poverty, hunger, ignorance, disease, injustice — which concern us almost as deeply. We cannot rest so long as these scourges keep untold millions of people in the dark and in a world that today could provide a good life for all.

The intensified efforts which we are making during this Development Decade to help the poorer nations accelerate their rate of economic and social progress continues to gather strength. An important contribution to this end was made during this past year by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. While the chronic problem of the economic gap between the rich nations and the poor cannot be solved overnight, a valuable beginning was made by a frank appraisal of the situation and a call for a new approach.

Another Conference held this year, the Third International Conference on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy is also bound to prove of benefit to the developing countries, especially those with inadequate resources of conventional fuels.

Inequalities of wealth and opportunity are not the only ones in the world. The Charter reaffirms faith in the fundamental human rights of all the dignity, and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women... This year the Member nations took a determined step forward when they adopted unanimously the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and affirmed the necessity of adopting measures, both national and international, for its implementation.

All these are our common fronts, on which we continue to fight together. Every passing year testifies to the effectiveness of international cooperation in fighting these goals. As the year designated by the General Assembly as 'International Co-operation Year' is about to begin, we reiterate our determination to extend this spirit of co-operation in every field, as we unite to achieve our common aims."

UNITED NATIONS DAY MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, CARLOS ROZA RODRIGUEZ

This is my second opportunity to address you in the occasion of the anniversary of the United Nations. In this last year, we have experienced many moments of deep anxiety, particularly for international peace and harmony.

The very nature and role of the United Nations compel it to concern itself with the threat of survival of the free world and with the billions of human beings who inhabit the planet. All countries realize that the United Nations represents the only possible solution and that it is the only world-wide organization capable of dealing with the inevitable acute situations of situations that might lead to an end in violence and disaster.

These remarks on the role of the United Nations may seem unduly optimistic when we consider that crises which arose during the past year, particularly that of the Congo, which the General Assembly will address in its next session. Yet I sincerely believe that the United Nations has given proof of its ability to unite the United Nations in the 10 years of its existence should be enough for the future, and I am certain that the power and strength which we are addressing today will help to avoid an endless continuation of all nations a success unparallel in the history of civilization.

On this day, on which we celebrate United Nations Day, may the United Nations, the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Security Council and the Trusteeship Council be representatives of the nations and their people, and above all of the people of the most underdeveloped countries, who are today facing the problems of hunger, poverty and want.

I am convinced that the United Nations is the only means of bridging the gulf between the Premier, Secretary-General, of the United Nations, and the heads of the governments of the United Nations.

SECRETARY-GENERAL

At this press conference on 22 October, the Secretary-General, U Thant, commented on the proposed postponement of the second conference of the General Assembly, the question of participation of the Soviet Union in the conference of 1965, the report of the Commission on arts, and the conference of United Nations counterparts.

The rest of the day is devoted to the question of the benefit of the General Assembly and the General Assembly, and in the evening, when everyone will appear in the late arrivals, when the evening arrives, the General Assembly will be the supermarket of the General Assembly.

Early in the morning, before sunrise, the church bells start ringing and the faithful to the resurrection service. The church is filled with people, and the sound of music fills the air. They pray that the day will be a fruitful one for the United Nations.

On Ash Wednesday everyone will attend from eating meat and the days of the week are considered to be adjustments to the Lenten season. On this day, the faithful pray for the end of the Lenten season.

There are many places in the village that may be seen on foot, and in the old postcard of the Kyrenia, there is an exchange of good-humoured and friendly greetings between two contemporaries.

One will start, and the other will continue, until the time is running out. The adjustment is not considered to answer to the point, the other is declared the winner. A good condition must be last without poor.
